National Tennis Foundation Chapter Spotlight

Ryan Wolfington - Inspiring Children Foundation & their TEAM BRYAN Leadership Program by Remington Reynolds, Volunteer of the National Tennis Foundation

Every morning last year, on the back streets just off the Vegas strip, Nicole Kalthorn and Cherril Odell could be heard practicing tennis with the Inspiring Children Foundation's elite TEAM BRYAN program. Just a few yards from the courts, young teenagers can be heard sharing the ups and downs of life. In the corner of the room sits Ryan Wolfington. As the children get to their deepest and most guarded fears and hopes, it's Ryan with whom they are talking.

Cherril Odell

In 2002, we set out to create the ultimate environment to help one child be their best...

Now we help 500 youth with 81 in college on scholarships to schools like Harvard, Stanford, Princeton, Penn, Vanderbilt, Georgetown and others.

This one on mentoring and the elite TEAM BRYAN leadership development program is unlike anything I have ever seen. It is the pride and joy of the National Tennis Foundation and something we want everyone to see.

In 1997, Ryan Wolfington was at the top of his game restructuring companies and taking them public. At the height of his success as President of a gaming company, he had his "Jerry Maguire" moment.

What began as a simple exercise in self reflection, gave way to a two-year sabbatical and commitment to a healthier and more fulfilling lifestyle. "I started to play tennis for fun, and realized I was more inspired by restructuring my life and helping young people do the same," explained Wolfington.

Helped by entertainment legend Tony Bennett, his twin brother Sean Wolfington, and the National Tennis Foundation, Ryan focused on creating a bridge to at-risk youth who need simple life skills or a person to talk with.

"The Beautiful Game"

Struggle. Beauty. Life on this great blue ball, not only depends on them, but thrives on both. This is the quality I look for as I portray both people and animals. Beauty- in a sunset or in the eyes of a child- is what takes our breath away, but we cannot appreciate it without the struggle to survive. That is what moves me, and is a hallmark of my paintings.

I am thankful for this opportunity to celebrate the world's greatest tennis athletes at the pinnacle of their careers- common ground with the greatest city on earth. As I paint, I focus on the eloquent and fantastic machines of the athlete's anatomy and the physics of the game of tennis- a beautifully designed match. "The Beautiful Game" is outward expression of an inward quest to investigate the artistry and science of tennis- in New York. Action lines course through the athletes, tracing parabolic forces that defy, not just gravity, but friction- and the opponent's mental toughness. Reflecting on the courageous people who fight for excellence, One World Trade Center stands victorious; to me it is a shining reminder that courage and perseverance paint the masterpiece. - Lucy McTier

"20 Years at Arthur Ashe"

Just like an emotionally charged blues guitar solo, the sensation to the listener transcends the genre. The callused hands that bring forth those sounds from the depths of the artist's struggles, can bring excitement and even joy to those listening. An elite athlete also brings their bruises, sweat and tears into an arena to validate their pain and emerge, in the midst of those watching- the victor.

Championship cities and venues add to this transformation as they offer a cocoon in which to showcase the metamorphosis of contender to champion. There are few arenas throughout history like New York's Arthur Ashe stadium. From the very first US Open Championship held there in 1977, the super stars of the tennis and entertainment world have filled our lives with countless memories. "20 Years of Champions" captures the emotion, elation and thrill of competition giving the tennis fan countless reasons for cheering as these heroes of the court have staked their claim in tennis immortality. - Jace McTier
